

Tracy Dennison is Professor of Social Science History at California Institute of Technology, the author of numerous publications on Russian economic history, including "The Institutional Framework of Russian Serfdom" (Cambridge, 2011). The book has won several awards, such as W. Bruce Lincoln Prize for Best First Monograph (Association for Slavic, East European, and Eurasian Studies); Henry A Wallace Prize for Best Book in Non-U.S. Agricultural History (Agricultural History Society) and Economic History Society Prize for Best First Monograph. Now Tracy Dennison is working on a new book about the political economy of imperial Russia, examining serfdom and emancipation in the context of state capacity and fiscal reform.

Max Schulze is Professor of Economic History at the London School of Economics and Political Science. His research interests include European economic history, long-run growth, market integration and historical economic geography. Among his publications are "Patterns of Growth and Stagnation in the Late Nineteenth Century Habsburg Economy," European Review of Economic History 4, no. 3 (2000); "On the Economic Consequences of the Peace: Trade and Borders after Versailles," Journal of Economic History 71, No. 4 (2011), with N. Wolf & H.C. Heinemeyer [Arthur H Cole Prize 2012 for best article published in the JEH 2011]; "Economic Nationalism and Economic Integration: the Austro-Hungarian Empire in the late 19th Century", with N. Wolf, Economic History Review 65, 2 (2012); "How Peripheral was the Periphery? Industrialization in East Central Europe since 1870," with A. Klein & T. Vonyó, in K. O'Rourke & J. Williamson (Oxford, 2017); "Benefits of Empire? Capital Market Integration North and South of the Alps, 1350-1800", with D. Chilosì and O. Volckart, Journal of Economic History 78, No. 3 (2018).

Jacob Weisdorf is a Professor of economics at the University of Southern Denmark, a research fellow at the CEPR in London, a research associate of the CAGE in Warwick, and a research affiliate at the Sant'Anna School of Advanced Studies in Pisa. His research interests concern the forces that led to the wealth of nations, including recent studies on England (the cradle of the industrial revolution), Italy (an industrial runner-up), and sub-Saharan Africa (a still-to-come region). Prof Weisdorf is also a former editor of the Scandinavian Economic History Review. He is an author of numerous articles on economic history including "From Foraging to Farming: Explaining the Neolithic Revolution," Journal of Economic Surveys 19, no. 4 (2005); "Human Capital Formation from Occupations: The 'Deskilling Hypothesis' Revisited," Cliometrica 11, no. 1 (2017); "Fecundity, Fertility and the Formation of Human Capital," The Economic Journal (2016).